Among other points which the secretary made in reply to the war department officials he said the stoppage of military operations was a very insignificant matter as compared with stopping the invasion of cholera and that while the occupation of Sandy Hook might affect a few hundred or perhaps a thousand people around there it would be of great benefit to the country at large and he (Secretary Foster) was acting for the American people Assistant Secretary of war Grant says nothing has been received at the department indicating an intention on the part of the state board of health of New Jersey to sustain their protest against the use of Sandy Hook as a quarantine station by national preservation, as it was stated in a dispatch from Trenton would be done Nothing has been received additional to the protest of Friday night last and the department officials decide the opinion of the attorney general, given to the president yesterday of the effect of the law of 1860, practically disposes of the case

As intimated in dispatches from Loon lake, President Harrison is investigating the laws regulating immigration, with a view to suspending it if that be possible The result of the inquiry will probably be made in a day or two. If it is found it there may be issued a proclamation covering the case

The Situation in Hamburg

HAMBURG, Sept 12 Reports concerning the epidemic to-day are more encouraging than at any time in the previous two weeks There have been 687 fresh cases of Ha fewer than yesterday and 123 fewer than on Saturday 258 deaths or 7 fewer than yesterday, and 49 fewer than on Saturday The burials to-day have numbered 315. There are this evening 106 patients in cholera hospitals and barracks against 200 yesterday The city shows many signs of recovery from a stupor of the last two weeks. Although there is no shopping or pleasure seeking the streets have been more populous to-day than yesterday and saloons billiard rooms and coffee houses which were closed for want of patronage on Saturday were opened this morning for business

The expectations of the people however are beyond the encouraging news given by to-day's statistics of the plague and another relapse like that of Saturday would bring the city back to its mourning and silence The fears which had almost ceased running were started to-day to make half the number of flight made back to the epidemic Sight They have been practically empty The hotels received thirty five strangers from other cities to-day No offers have been made to revive the shipping business in the harbor The fishing vessels are tied to their docks and will remain so, the owners say until October as the demand for fish has been completely extinguished Only about 7 per cent of the usual number of vessels are now loading at the port and few even of these all quota carry full cargoes The water front was filled all day with unemployed making inquiries as to when work will be resumed at the docks. Many of the laborers who were told that for two or three weeks at least they could not expect to get work The work of the relief committee is now being put into the hands of the poor families and to-day six children and two women in the harbor district are reported as having died from lack of nourishment The official report of the municipality was published today The total number of cases is given as 14 109 the number of deaths almost exactly 9000 The highest death rate is said to have been reached on August 30 when 481 fatal cases were reported The Hamburg board of health is let down easily in the report which represents that official body as being over moderate success in its efforts to stay the progress of the plague The council dwells upon the evils of using filth water and recommend that artesian wells to replace the infected water works be drilled in all parts of the city The total exodus of citizens to escape infection is estimated to have amounted to 2 000 persons This is necessarily guesswork as only in complete returns from railway officials are the basis of the estimate The number has been nearer 45,000 or 50 000 probably The concurrent testimony of persons from Hamburg has been treated in other German cities as if they were leprous and may be taken as a sign of relief upon Reading where the newspapers have equally flied their denunciations of the relief city and when Hamburg, fugitives have been received only under protest

An Increase in Cholera Cases

ST PETERSBURG Sept 12 The close of the past week so far as reported shows an increase in the number of cholera cases in Russia On Thursday there were 2 cases and 248 deaths In the city there were thirty nine deaths and 1 new case The death rate for the week ending the past week was lower than in the corresponding week of the previous year notwithstanding cholera Dr Flmer Lee of Chicago is here making a study of the cholera and is receiving cordial assistance from the minister of the interior and other Russian officials.

It can never be, Mr Fish' she said, trying to be firm although the tears were welling up in her forgetmenot eyes.

Why not Gwendolyn? he asked bending toward her until she could distinctly hear him swallow the lump that had risen in his throat at her words. Don't you love me any more?

Yes, yes I love you. Believe me, I love you," she sobbed handing her hand from his.

Tell me! he asked with anguish have you learned to love another?'

No!' she cried Oh, how could you doubt me!'

Well, then why have you changed?"

It is—it is—oh, I can't say it!' she sobbed out. "It is—it is—your name!"

"My name!" he echoed It is among the Four Hundred as well as yours, Miss Codd"

"You wrong me. You wrong me greatly," she sobbed drawing off his ring and standing before him in all her stateliness. I mean I can never be yours because it would break mamma's heart to sink the family name, and how can I become Mrs Codd Fish?' —New York Evening Sun

WHITTIER

Lessons Drawn From the Life of the Quaker Poet, Sunday Evening.

The special Whittier service in the First Congregational church Sunday evening attracted an audience which filled all the seats and chairs placed in the aisles.

Rev William F. Slocum, president of Colorado college, gave some personal reminiscences of Whittier, as he knew him when he, Mr. Slocum was pastor of a church in Amesbury Mr Whittier's home. President Slocum described Whittier's old homestead, which is described in his poems, "Snow Bound," and then gave a description of the poet's Amesbury house, with the "garden room," which has been the center of his literary work since 1840 and in which most of his writings were done; the poet a person of appearance, his simplicity in manner and taste His companions were such men as Emerson, Holmes and Phillips. He took great pleasure in meeting and talking with the simple plain country folk which came to the town. One of his characteristics was the deep interest he took in public affairs. Governor Claflin of Massachusetts said that during the civil war, in the consultations of the most distinguished statesmen and politicians, Whittier's opinion on any matter was always regarded as final his judgment was so [illegible]

He was a great lover of books, and took special interest in books of poetry and essays. He was a profound student of theology

A fact not generally known Mr Slocum said, was that Whittier had a very keen sense of humor, shown in personal interviews with friends.

He had in many respects a lonely life, particularly in later years, but was always cheerful and happy The speaker had a very warm personal attachment and friendship with Mr. Whittier and spoke very warmly of the value of the friendship to him

Dr Gregg then preached the regular sermon, taking his text from Psalms 119, 54. "Thy statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage." He said: "Of that remarkable company of American writers who were living at the time of the outbreak of the civil war, Emerson, Longfellow Bryant, Longfellow Lowell, Whittier, Mrs. Stowe and Holmes only the last two now remain Of them all, none has been more reverenced and beloved by his country men than the modest and gentle spirit whose life and work on earth came last Wednesday to an end.

"Whittier stood in contrast with the eminent men of literature who were his contemporaries that he alone among them had not received what is called a liberal education Longfellow Bryant, Holmes, Emerson and Hawthorne were all college graduates and this earlier culture was supplemented by travel abroad But Whittier had no schooling beyond what the Haverhill academy supplied and he never crossed the Atlantic. In this latter respect his opportunities of intellectual culture were less than those of Irving and Howells, who are almost the only literary men not college graduates who have won a high place in our literary annals. So Whittier was like Horace Greeley and Abraham Lincoln a man of the people, in the best sense a self made man, fashioned wholly on American soil and more completely than any other of great writers, by American influences. His Quaker faith, to which he always loyally adhered and whose customs he measurably followed helped to mold his life and his work with a distinctive and characteristic flavor He did not suffer himself to be cramped and burdened in any one of the outward formalisms of his sect He walked not after its letter but after the spirit All that was essential and most vital in the testimony of Quakerism lived and wrought in him The inner light illuminated his own spirit and made him a light enlightening the world

Mr Gregg then briefly sketched the life of the poet and his fight with the slave powers He then analyzed closely the character of the poet as shown in his verse, of which he read many extracts, taking them, in order as they were written and showing the growth and development of the soul that inspired them
